One of the leaders who helped Jamestown survive was John Smith. He traded with the local Powhatan Native American tribe and learned from them how to grow crops like corn. This helped the settlers have enough food to survive. Pocahontas, the Powhatan chief's daughter, also played a significant role in helping Jamestown by bringing food and negotiating with her people.

The Jamestown Colony

Jamestown's economy started to thrive when they began growing tobacco, which was in high demand in England. John Rolfe, a settler, successfully cultivated a sweeter type of tobacco that became popular in Europe. This cash crop helped Jamestown grow and prosper.
