Milton Hershey's vision extended far beyond producing quality chocolate. He believed in creating a utopian community where his workers could live, work, and thrive. In 1903, he established Hershey, Pennsylvania, as a model town, complete with schools, parks, and housing for his employees. The town's "Great Building Campaign" included iconic landmarks such as the Hotel Hershey, Hersheypark, and the Hershey Theatre, all of which continue to enhance the town's charm today.
